Most people have never heard of Naperville, IL. A small community just outside of Chicago, less than 39 square miles, with a little under 143,000 residents. [1]

"Money Magazine has ranked Naperville in the top 5 best places to live in America three out of the past six years." [2]

This appeared to be an ideal community until January 23, 2013, when the demons of radical government control, seemingly invaded the City Council members, forcing the constitutional and civil rights of some residents to be violated.

Upon information and belief the City Council met behind closed doors and decided to strong arm residents who refused to accept their smart meters or their mandated alternative meter.

Four phone calls were made to Doug A. Krieger, the City Manager, along with calls to Naperville's Public Affairs office, with assurances of a return call, for their side of this action, Krieger refused to return the call. Apparently, he wants to be the 'man behind the curtain' and hiding from his actions. All fluff until it was time to come forward and defend and/or explain the actions of his City Council.

There is an open case in federal court against the City regarding smart meters, filed by Naperville Smart Meter Awareness Group. Most 'civilized' communities while there is pending litigation would have the issue/s in question on hold. Not the egomaniacal council and city manager, they decided that the residents were so 'threatening' that they
