When required to provide accommodations under the Americans for Disability Act (ADA), the Nevada Public Utilities Commission (PUC) revised their public comment protocol as a 'punishment.'

The PUC has taken retaliatory action for these challenges by subsequently suppressing public speech at its agenda meetings. If a person is the designated representative for more than one entity, any one person is now precluded from appearing on behalf of more than one individual entity, reducing the allowable speaking time to just two minutes. In the preceding two years, the PUC had no problem when one person represented associated entities.
